STANFORD LOSES APPEAL

2 A U.S. appeals court rejected Texas financier Robert Allen Stanford's bid to overturn his conviction and 110-year prison sentence for running what federal prosecutors called a $7.2 billion Ponzi scheme. The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans turned aside 10 arguments raised by Stanford. These included that he was not competent to stand trial, the government did not prove its case, the sentence was too long, and the trial judge was biased toward prosecutors, including by denying him a lawyer of his choice. PSPCA and Uber bring kittens to Philly offices

Kittens were transported around the city today to provide stressed out office workers with a bit of snuggling therapy.

The PSPCA and Uber teamed up to celebrate National Cat Day by bringing PSPCA kittens to offices using Uber cars. Thirteen of the kittens, all of whom were available for adoption from the PSPCA Fishtown shelter, were adopted by Thursday evening, with PSPCA staff hoping for more adoptions to come.

"I heard over and over, 'This was just what we needed,'" said Gillian Kocher, PSPCA director of public relations and marketing, who went out with one of the 10 Uber cars making visits.

"For a lot of the businesses that I visited, it really seemed like a bit of a morale boost for the staff," she said. "I think it was a break from the everyday grind, to take a minute and have some fun with these adorable kittens."

Uber, which recently celebrated its one-year anniversary of operations in Philly, partnered with the PSPCA to offer kitten visits from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Businesses could request 15 minutes of playtime with kittens for $30.

Around 80 businesses participated and got kittens in their office. DAN KELLEY

Chaka Fattah Jr. discusses his case outside federal court SAM NEWHOUSE

Fattah Jr. leads his own defense

The congressman's son is representing himself at trial.

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

An increasingly testy atmosphere dominated the courtroom Thursday as Chaka Fattah Jr. began presenting his defense in his federal fraud case.

Fattah's first witness was former Gov. Ed Rendell — who testified that his 2002 campaign for governor hired Fattah's photo company, Fattahgraphy, for $5,000, and that he was very satisfied with the work.

As for the specifics of the federal indictment — which accuses Fattah of cooking up numerous businesses to acquire huge business loans which financed a luxurious lifestyle and of overbilling the School District of Philadelphia as a consultant to a charter school — Rendell said he had no idea what any of it was about.

"I testified to the facts. ... I assume they were relevant," Rendell said outside court of his testimony.

Asked how Fattahgraphy fit in with the case, Rendell said, "I have no clue."

Meanwhile, federal prosecutors and agents barely concealed their exasperation, disdain and even anger as they listened to questions from the man on trial acting as his own attorney.

Fattah Jr., who is not a lawyer, asked lengthy questions, which he frequently rephrased or withdrew, leaving numerous federal agents who he questioned saying, "I don't understand" or "Can you repeat the question?"

Prosecutor Paul Gray objected at one point, stating, "I think Mr. Fattah speaking out loud constantly is a form of testifying. ... It's totally improper."

Judge Harvey Bartle III agreed, telling Fattah Jr. to "stop making statements about what's true and what's not true" during arguments and questions.

The jury judging Fattah Jr. is nearly all-white, with only two South Asian men and just three women.

Fattah Jr. called lawyer Steve Kaplan, general counsel for the Democratic City Committee, who testified about a $5,000 payment by Congressman Bob Brady's 2002 campaign to Fattahgraphy for services.

When Kaplan acknowledged he did not work with Fattah Jr. in years past 2005 — the period at stake in the trial — prosecutor Eric Gibson asked him, "Why are you here?"

Fattah's defense case is scheduled to continue today.

SEPTA food drive extended
SEPTA said Thursday they are extending the annual "Stop Hunger at Your Station" food drive for Philabundance through to Monday, Nov. 2.

SEPTA is collecting donations of canned goods in marked barrels at 43 designated stations.

"We decided to extend the food drive through Monday to give people a little more time to donate — and hopefully help us top the 18 tons of food contributed last year," said SEPTA General Manager Jeffrey D. Knueppel. METRO

Poll: Most blame GOP for budget war
Slightly more than half of the state's voters blame the Republican-dominated state legislature for the months-long budget fight in Harrisburg, a Franklin and Marshall College poll says.

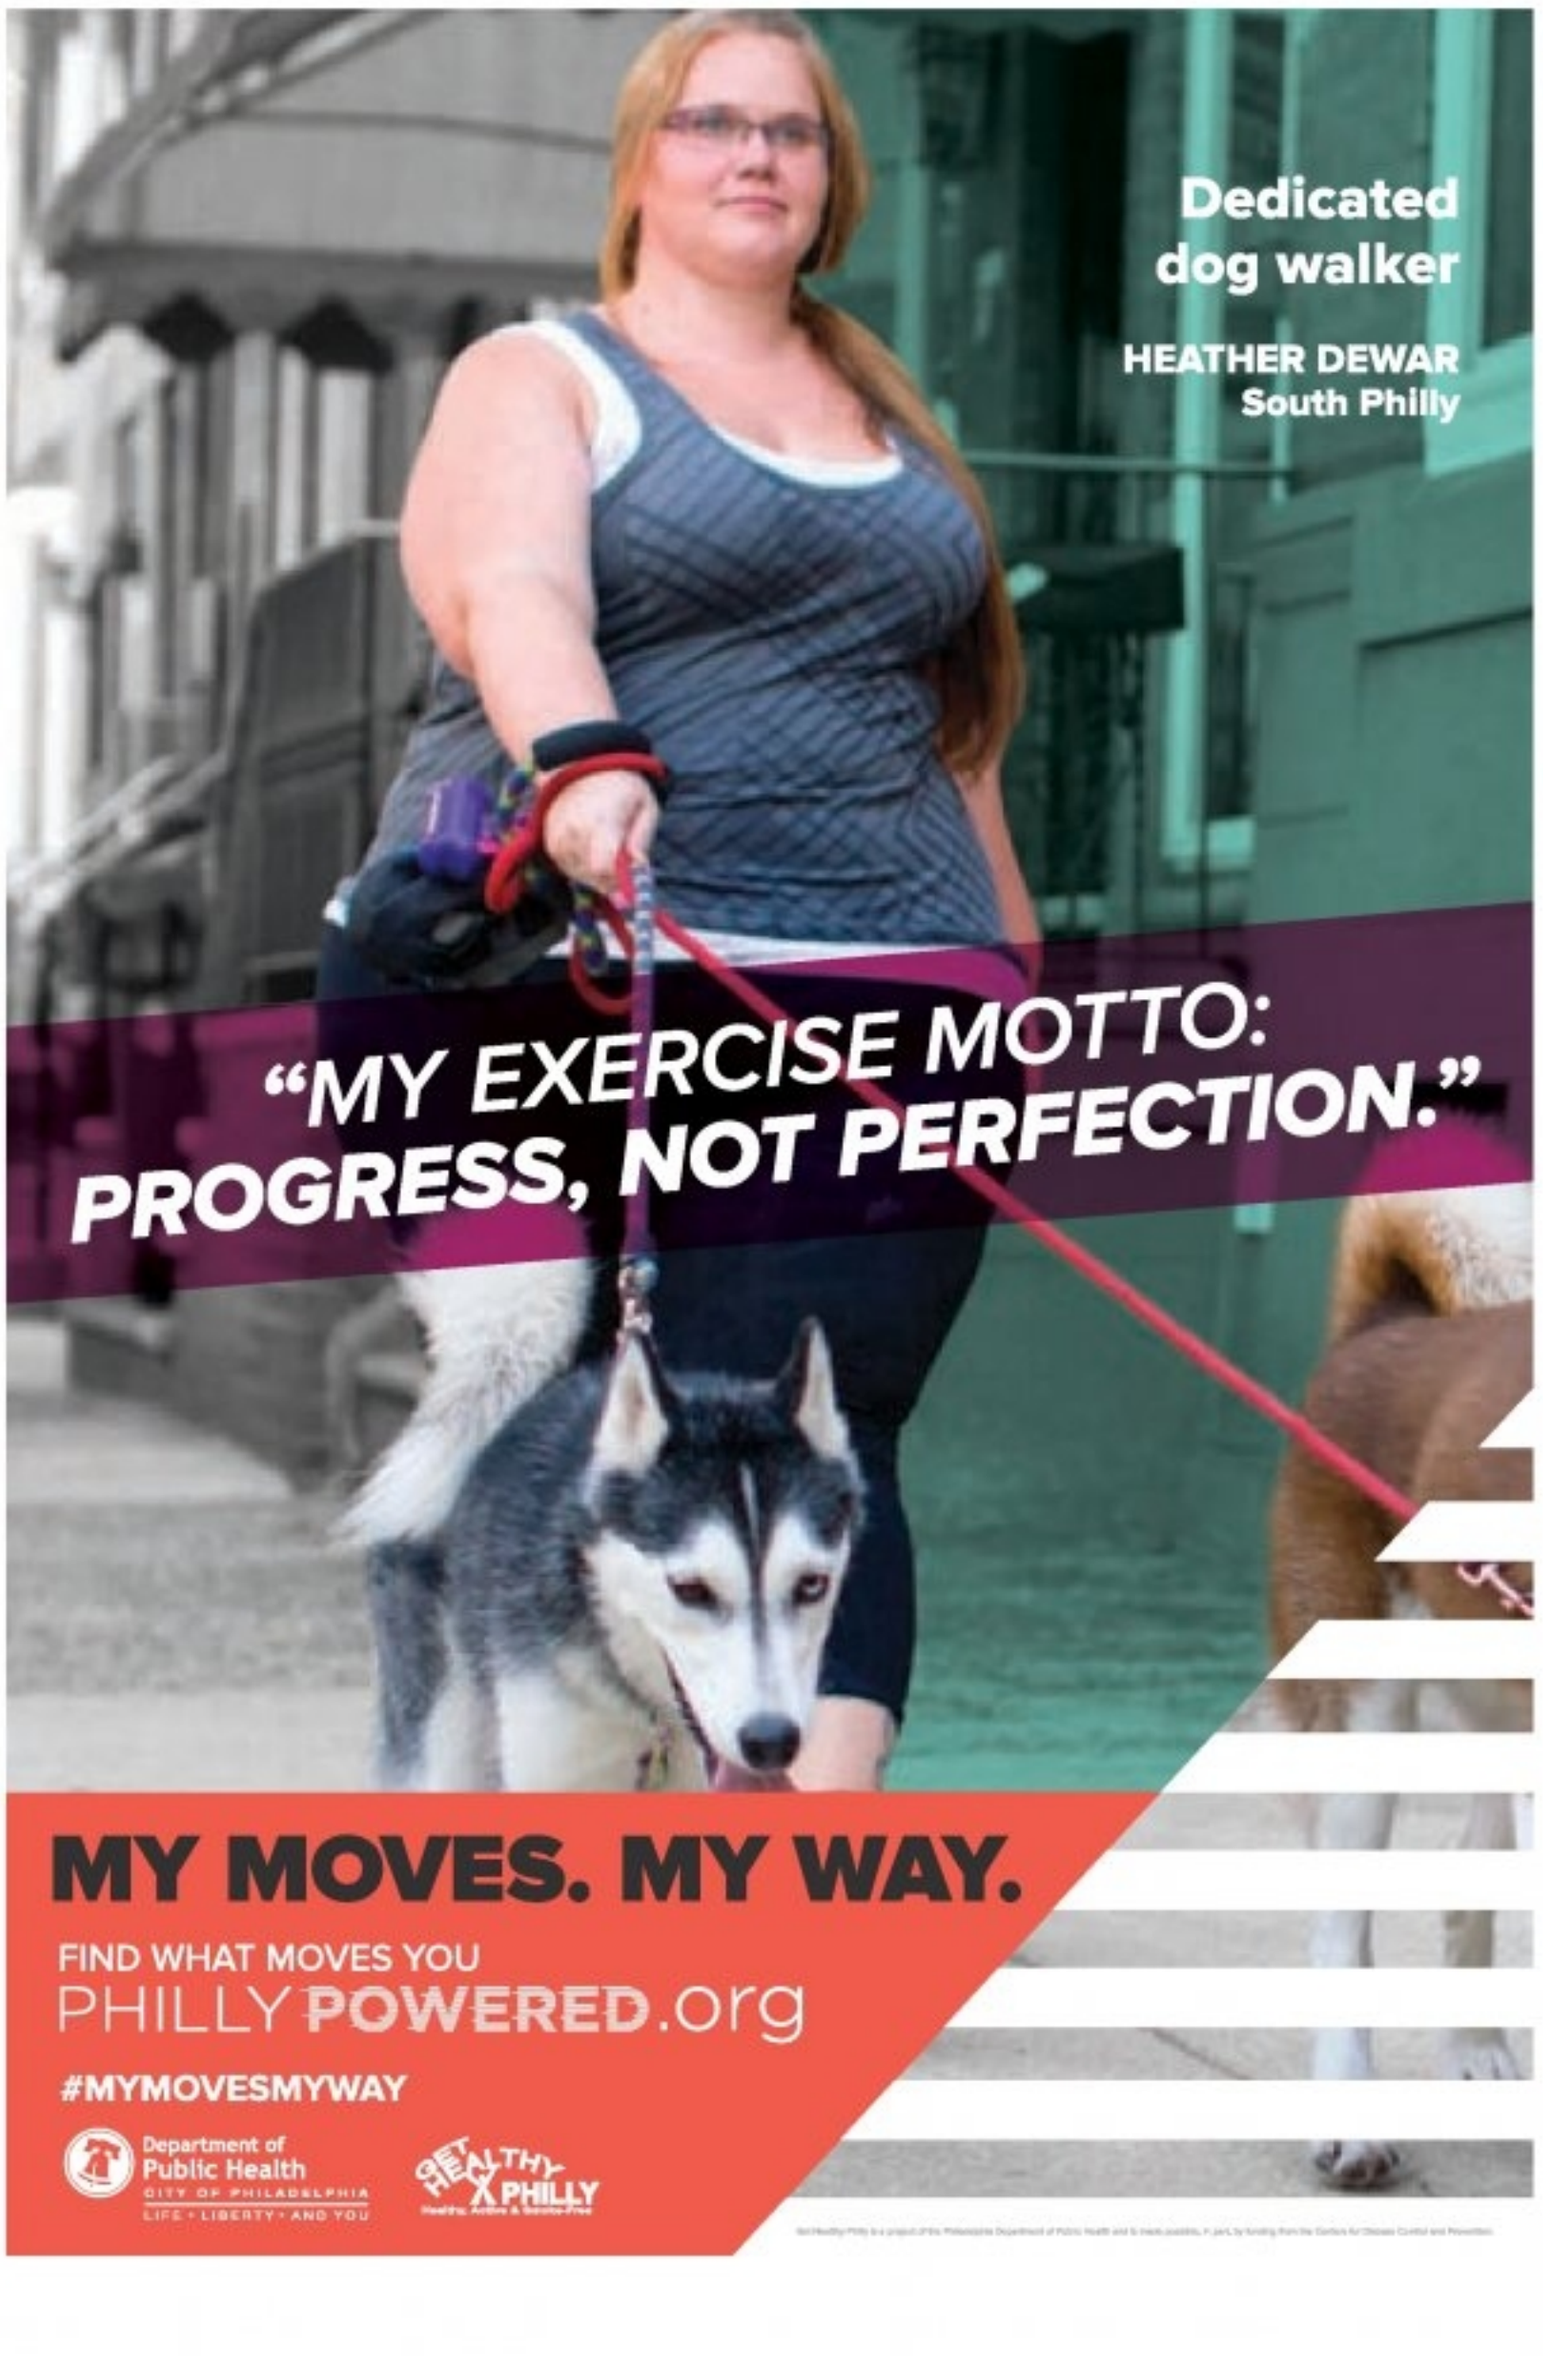
When asked who they trust to solve the state's budget problems, registered voters give only a slight nod to Democratic Gov. Tom Wolf over the legislature by a margin of 43 to 38.

Wolf and the GOP have been locked in a budget stalemate since July when the governor vetoed the GOP's entire $30 billion spending proposal. Wolf wants big increases on school spending.

The stalemate has left nonprofits dependent on state funding in the lurch. School districts across the state have announced they are set to borrow hundreds of millions to cover the gap — a move that could cost them millions in interest payments.

The poll surveyed 614 people between Oct. 19 and Oct. 25.

The results showed Donald Trump holding a slight lead in the state over neurosurgeon Ben Carson, 23 to 22 percent. Marco Rubio is third at 13 percent. DAN KELLEY



The SS United States docked in South Philadelphia. MARIA S. YOUNG

Famed ship eyes Brooklyn move

New waterfront digs could save the SS United States.

DAN KELLEY
@MetroPhilly
dan.kelley@metro.us

With a deadline looming over the fate of the SS United States, a New York City-based concrete magnate has stepped forward to offer a place for the 63-year-old ship.

The conservancy that owns the vessel, which has been docked in South Philly for 19 years, announced last month that it was short on cash and would make a decision on whether to scrap the vessel by the end of October.

John Quadrozzi Jr., whose firm owns a major pier in the Red Hook section of Brooklyn, has stepped forward to offer the 990-foot ship a home.

Quadrozzi told the Waterways Alliance, a New York-based organization dedicated to protecting and transforming the New York City's waterways that he is looking to raise $2 million it would cost to tow, remediate and moor the ship along the 1,300 foot Gowanus Bay Terminal.

Tom Basile, a spokesman for the SS United States Conservancy said the organization is interested in Quadrozzi's offer.

But it is also in talks with another New York pier owner to bring the ship there. That deal has a developer attached to it that could remodel and rehabilitate the ship's gutted interior. Basile and other conservancy officials have declined to identify it.

It's unclear if Quadrozzi's offer has a development plan attached to it — he didn't return calls for comment. But his offer could take some of the pressure off of the conservancy, which must raise about $60,000 a month to keep the ship in South Philadelphia.

The SS United States was built after World War II as a luxury liner that could be converted quickly into a troop carrier. It's powerful engines — whose true capabilities were a Cold War secret — helped it break the speed record for a trans-Atlantic crossing.

After the coming of the jet age, she was taken out of service in 1969.

Members of the conservancy have long held out hope that someone could develop it into multi-use facility that could include a hotel, performance space, offices, and banquet facilities.

Estimates for what that would cost range around $200 million.

"John … has a great vision to see it there as a tourist attraction and economic development project," said Waterfront Alliance CEO Roland Lewis.

PORN, LIES & A HAUNTED PHILLY GAY WITCH HUNT

Yusaf Mack GETTY IMAGES

Black Philadelphians don't need to watch a horror film this Halloween to feel spooked — just watch a gay porn clip.

Many in the community are outraged and stunned after finding out West Philly professional boxer Yusaf "Mack Attack" Mack was apart of a highly explicit gay sex tape shot by Dawgpound USA, a popular black gay porn production company.

In the viral video, which I saw as part of my research (and just downright curiosity), Mack appears to be knowingly cooperative with partaking in a threesome with two other black men.

He looks very sexually engaged and attentive — he kisses, verbalizes personal sexual demands and even struts in a staged photography shoot with the other men in nude.

This video is not a homemade sex tape, but a professional film that is currently being sold and distributed. Mack even goes by the stage name "Philly" in the sex tape to not disclose his real identity.

But according to Mack's front-page story with the Daily News this week, the engaged father of 10 children claims he was "drugged," and "love females."

"The only time I touch a man is when I'm in the ring fighting," he said.

He also claims that he agreed to do a sex tape because he was short on cash, but wasn't under the impression that it would be gay porn.

Masculinity is so damn fragile. And for that reason, I personally think his explanation is bull.

But beyond his claims that he found himself back on a train to Philadelphia (Mack also states that he was paid $4,500 cash for his performance and has yet to actually file an investigation even after a year has passed), the story altogether reads like a tragic tale of the black community having yet to address homophobia.

Social media has already run amuck with blatant homophobic rhetoric that is rooted in religious and sexist arguments. "Mack is too damn tough to be a sissy," one man posted while sharing the article on Facebook. "He has slept with too many bitches to be gay ... he's not going to hell."

Other Facebook comments pitied the situation altogether with one woman saying, "This is what happens to black men when they're on the down low ... our community should evolve."

But as the witch hunt to expose this man's sexual exploits continues (famed blogger B. Scott revealed screenshots of Mack in the nude with two different black gay porn performers from another shoot) it's frustrating to see how unprogressive we are on LGBTQ sensitivity in Philly.

As an openly gay black man who has never done porn or disgraced my relationship/family due to my sexuality — it upsets me that my identity stands to be the brunt of the bashing.

Stop it. Cut it out. As a community that has been marginalized and oppressed for simply existing, the scrutiny toward LGBTQ individuals as a whole from this scandal isn't fair or necessary.

For one man's misguided actions shouldn't define an entire community, as your own issues shouldn't define another. Do better, my black people.

South Carolina church massacre detailed in newly released documents

The accounts cited calls from a person inside Emanuel African Methodist Episcopal Church, and another who hid in an office in the church.

"People shot down. ... Shot pastor. ... Man is still here."

Police communications log

Police logs released on Thursday revealed a chilling account of the June 17 massacre at a historic black church in Charleston, South Carolina, that killed nine people.

"People shot down. ... Shot pastor. ... Man is still here. ... Lower level ...," an entry in the police communications log said.

An entry one minute later said, "Young white male. ... Male is reloading.

"Shots have been fired. The number of shots fired is: SO MANY."

According to the report, authorities were aware of a woman hiding under an office desk with her daughter in the church. They also knew the suspected shooter had fled out the church's back door.

Dylann Roof, 21, has been charged with murder and state prosecutors are seeking the death penalty. He also faces nearly three dozen federal hate crime and weapons charges in what authorities say was a racially motivated rampage.

A cross covered with paper notes is erected outside the Emanuel AME Church in Charleston, South Carolina. GETTY IMAGES

The heavily redacted police reports and photographs released by the Charleston Police Department on Thursday make up some of the evidence against Roof. Some media organizations who sued to get the documents made public said police went too far in blacking out names, comments and key details.

A state judge this month lifted a gag order placed on the evidence but decided that graphic crime scene photographs, audio of 911 emergency phone calls and other sensitive materials would remain sealed to protect the victims.

State prosecutor Scarlett Wilson said in a letter to media that further investigative reports would be withheld if her office decided they infringed on the privacy of the survivors and families of victims or could harm Roof's right to a fair trial.

The released documents said Roof was quiet and compliant when officers located him in Shelby, North Carolina, the morning after the massacre and pulled over his car about 10:30 a.m. When asked if he knew why he was detained, he nodded his head.

A sergeant asked Roof if police should know about anything in his car.

"Yeah, there's a gun in the backseat," Roof said, according to the report. REUTERS

Illinois man pleads guilty to trying to join Islamic State

The case has highlighted the problem of young Americans and Europeans influenced by online propaganda by Islamic State.

Shafi Ullah Khan, father of Mohammed Hamzah Khan. GETTY IMAGES

A 20-year-old Chicago-area man pleaded guilty Thursday to a federal charge of trying to provide support to Islamic State militants in exchange for prosecutors agreeing to seek a prison sentence of no more than five years.

Mohammed Hamzah Khan told U.S. District Judge John Tharp that he had intended to travel to Syria to work for Islamic State, including taking a possible combat role, and acknowledged that he knew the U.S. government considers the group a terrorist organization.

Khan was 19 when he was arrested in October 2014 at O'Hare International Airport as he tried to travel to the Middle East with his siblings, then 17 and 16 years old.

The U.S. also has tried to block recruiting, with investigators saying 80 percent of Americans linked to activities supporting militant movements have radicalized themselves over the Internet.

The maximum penalty in Khan's case is 15 years in prison and a $250,000 fine plus a long supervised release. But if he continues to cooperate with prosecutors — potentially providing insight into online recruiting — the government agreed to recommend a sentence of five years.

Khan's lawyer, Thomas Durkin, said he would seek a sentence of fewer than five years at sentencing early next year.

Durkin said Khan was brainwashed by slick online propaganda and that while he understands why his client decided to plead guilty, he remains skeptical that prosecution is the answer to the wider problem. REUTERS

Newly elected speaker Paul Ryan promises to fix 'broken' House

Ryan said in a speech after the vote that infighting in the Republican-majority House had been counterproductive and added to the legislative gridlock in Washington.

House Speaker Paul Ryan GETTY IMAGES

Newly elected U.S. House Speaker Paul Ryan on Thursday promised to sweep away Republican Party differences and repair a "broken" House of Representatives by returning legislative power to committees and rank-and-file members.

Ryan won 236 votes among the chamber's 247 Republicans to be elected speaker, abandoned by only a handful of conservatives who mounted repeated revolts that pushed out his predecessor, John Boehner, who retired.

"We're not solving problems, we're adding to them, and I am not interested in laying blame," Ryan said.

"We are not settling scores, we are wiping the slate clean," Ryan added to applause.

Ryan said the House would tackle tough issues, including reducing budget deficits and reforming taxes, saying this would help raise incomes and bring people out of poverty.

The Wisconsin congressman said he would return control over drafting legislation to committees and rank-and-file members, adding: "If you know the issue, you should write the bill."

Boehner's practice of drafting major spending legislation in secret, often in negotiations with Democrats as fiscal deadlines loomed, had been a constant source of friction among conservatives. REUTERS

Navy scrambled jets after Russian planes approached carrier, US official says

A U.S. Navy aircraft carrier scrambled four F-18 jets Tuesday after two Russian anti-submarine aircraft flew within a nautical mile of the warship, a Navy official said Thursday.

News reports said the incident occurred in international waters east of the Korean peninsula.

A U.S. Navy official said two Russian TU-142 "Bear" aircraft flew within a nautical mile of the Reagan, prompting it to launch four F-18 fighter jets to escort the planes away from the ship.

The TU-145 Bear is a long-range anti-submarine warfare plane and a variant of the TU-95 Bear strategic bomber.

The Navy official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the pilots from both sides behaved professionally and the TU-145s moved away from the U.S. carrier.

Media accounts quoted Navy officials as saying the incident was not unprecedented.

China to allow couples with two children to counter aging population of the nation

The policy is a major liberalization of the country's family planning restrictions, already eased in late 2013 when Beijing said it would allow more families to have two children when the parents met certain conditions.

China will ease family planning restrictions to allow all couples to have two children after decades of a strict one-child policy, the ruling Communist Party said on Thursday, a move aimed at alleviating demographic strains on the economy.

A growing number of scholars had urged the government to reform the rules, introduced in the late 1970s to prevent population growth spiraling out of control, but now regarded as outdated and responsible for shrinking China's labor pool.

For the first time in decades the working age population fell in 2012, and China, the world's most populous nation, could be the first country in the world to get old before it gets rich.

By around the middle of this century, one in every three Chinese is forecast to be over 60, with a dwindling proportion of working adults to support them.

The announcement was made at the close of a key Party meeting focused on financial reforms and maintaining growth between 2016 and 2020 amid concerns over the country's slowing economy.

China will "fully implement a policy of allowing each couple to have two children as an active response to an aging population," the party said in a statement carried by the official Xinhua news agency.

There were no immediate details on the new policy or a timeframe for implementation.

Wang Feng, a leading expert on demographic and social change in China, called the change an "historic event" that would change the world but said the challenges of China's aging society would remain.

Shares of baby formula makers such as Mead Johnson Nutrition Co (MJN.N) and Danone SA (DANO.PA) rose on hopes for a surge in demand, although one analyst warned against an over-reaction.

"We would expect that this would have a positive impact on our pediatric business in China, assuming an increase in births," said Scott Stoffel, a spokesman for Abbott Laboratories (ABT.N), the maker of Similac formula, which gets 10 percent of its global nutrition sales from China.

"It's an event that we have been waiting for a generation, but it is one we have had to wait much too long for."

Bradley Cooper gets down to business in "Burnt." THE WEINSTEIN COMPANY

THE FUN STARTS HERE

Bradley Cooper heads back into the kitchen as a volatile chef seeking redemption in "Burnt."

NED EHRBAR
@Nedrick
ned.ehrbar@metro.us

"Burnt" isn't the first time Bradley Cooper has played a chef. He starred on the short-lived Fox sitcom "Kitchen Confidential" — inspired by Anthony Bourdain's exploits — some 10 years ago. This time, though, he's taking on an even more volatile cook, with a reformed hard-partier inspired by Gordon Ramsay, Marcus Wareing and Marco Pierre White going for his third Michelin star.

I was actually a huge fan of "Kitchen Confidential." In your mind, is there any sort of connection between the two?
You know, it's so different. The characters and the tone are so different. That was a half-hour single-camera comedy for Fox, and this is a feature film. I never did feel a connection — I thought I would feel more, but I didn't. When I got into the kitchen with this movie, it just felt like a completely different thing. It was just so real.

How realistic of a kitchen setup are we talking?
That's a functioning kitchen. There were no cooking doubles. Every shot, that's me doing it, for better or for worse. All the other extras that you see in the kitchen, those were all chefs who work in Michelin-starred restaurants. None of them were actors aside from my co-stars. The rest were all chefs. And we were making food. Each day, we would come into work, there would be orders that we would have that I would call out, and there would be food in the refrigerator ready to cook those meals, and we had to cook them. And they just rolled the camera. Then we had Marcus Wareing, who is a two-Michelin-starred chef who created all the dishes, overseeing everything for its authenticity behind the monitor. So yeah, it really was unique in that way.

Doing multiple takes of eating scenes can be rough, but what do you do when you're cooking things over and over again?
There's a whole other kitchen behind our kitchen that was making all of the extra plates of food to be brought out. The minute it would be over, they would replenish everybody's pan with the food, the steak, the fish so that I could plate it again.

So how do you think you'd fare as a chef?
The one thing I was aware of after doing this movie was how unequipped I am to be a chef. I thought I was much better than I was in terms of having worked in restaurants, having been a prep cook, having been a part of a brigade. When I was 18, I worked at a seafood and Italian restaurant in Somers Point, New Jersey, and cleaned 625 chickens in one day. It was insane, the stuff I had to do and be berated by chefs like that. But that pales in comparison to this level of perfection, this level of accuracy, this level of pursuit for perfection. And it's real. Doing research with Gordon Ramsay — who opened up his whole world to me, really — him and Marcus, those were the guys who really showed me how it's done.

Where do you think this reputation of chefs being so volatile comes from?
I think the rock star idea, the iconic chef, really originated with Marco Pierre White. There was a cookbook that came out called "White Heat" where the photographer had taken these badass photos of him, and then "Boiling Point" was a documentary the BBC did about Gordon Ramsay going after his third Michelin star, and it was the first time anyone had ever agreed to let cameras go behind the scenes in the kitchen of that level of a restaurant. And that's where it all sort of started. You realized how intense and high-octane that world is.

So long, Broadway

You also wrapped up your theatrical run of "The Elephant Man" in London's West End and on Broadway. Any plans for more stage work in your future?
Oh man, I don't know. That was a year. A whole year of my life. [Laughs] That was two different countries for a year. I think I need a little break. Maybe just movies for a little while.

Speaking Spanish with Zoe Kazan

The actress talks playing funny in "Our Brand Is Crisis" and her history with a second language.

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

In "Our Brand Is Crisis," Zoe Kazan plays LeBlanc, a political researcher who is both excellent at digging up dirt and translating Spanish. WARNER BROS. PICTURES

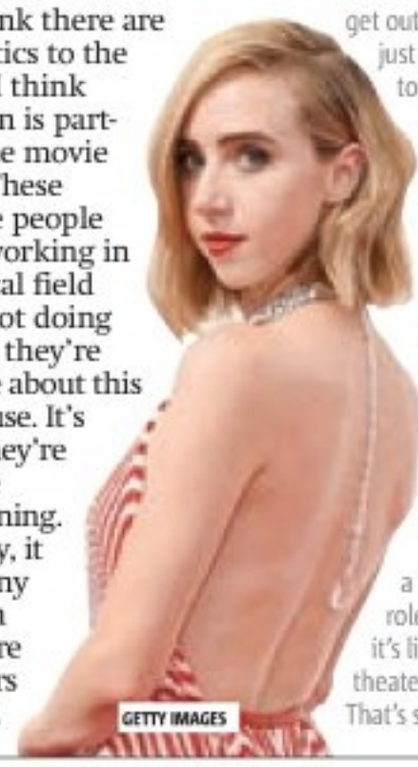
Zoe Kazan tends to play serious or, if it's a rom-com like "What If," quasi-serious. But in "Our Brand Is Crisis," she gets to play LeBlanc, a character whose primary function is as a comic foil. LeBlanc is the crafty right-hand person of Sandra Bullock's political adviser, who's lent her services out to a probably crooked Bolivian pol (Joaquim de Almeida), whose political race isn't going so well. It's based on a 2005 doc of the same name, though it's been fashioned into a satirical comedy that milks laughs out of Ugly Americans foisting American ideals upon other countries.

LeBlanc is unusual for you because she's mostly a comedic character.
That was part of it — the idea of getting to play this enigma. I had also accidentally done a lot of romantic comedies. I was just tired of that genre. I liked the idea of being able to do something about a bunch of people using their minds, and there was getting to speak Spanish in a movie. It's a language I grew up speaking, which I never get to use.

How did you wind up growing up speaking Spanish?
My mom was a Navy brat, and their family was stationed in Barcelona for a portion of her childhood. My mom spoke Spanish. And then my parents are both writers and worked full-time seven days a week. So they hired this woman to come and not nanny me, but raise me. I became incredibly close to her. And she doesn't speak any English. So I grew up speaking Spanish with her.

Given your character primarily serves as a translator, I assume your grasp of the language is what got you the role.
I auditioned for the part. I had to improvise in Spanish in the audition. I think everyone thought I was much better at Spanish than I actually am. My accent is good; it fools people.

This is technically a political film, but it's more along the lines of "Veep" or "In the Loop," where it's not a specific party that's being criticized but the game itself.
I don't think there are overt politics to the film, and I think that notion is partly what the movie is about. These people are people who are working in the political field who are not doing it because they're passionate about this or that cause. It's because they're passionate about winning. In that way, it could be any industry in which there are winners and losers.



GETTY IMAGES

Zoe (doesn't) go to the movies

It's rare these days to have a studio film like this that is about ideas.
There are enough films that are interesting and worth our time that don't get a sufficient run in the theater, or they do get out there and we just don't manage to make it to see them. ... I can't remember the last time I went to the theater. I mean, I haven't seen "Sicario" yet. It's exactly the kind of movie I say I want to see: a movie that's about something, that has a strong female role. And then it's like, "Oh, it's in theaters right now." That's shame on me.

‘Crisis’ is a political film more goofy than heavy-handed

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Sandra Bullock and Ann Dowd play political campaign players trying to ignore that they’re probably ruining Bolivia in “Our Brand Is Crisis.” WARNER BROS. PICTURES

“Our Brand Is Crisis”
Director: David Gordon Green
Stars: Sandra Bullock, Billy Bob Thornton
Rating: R

Disarmingly fun for a George Clooney-produced movie based on a sobering political documentary, “Our Brand Is Crisis” is a movie that allows you to catch a ride with monsters. Sandra Bullock plays “Calamity” Jane Bodine, an infamous campaign consultant lured out of calm, boring, nicotine-free retirement to help an incumbent Bolivian president (Joaquim de Almeida) suffering a disastrous re-election.

Things are bound to get serious, but the middle hour-and-change belong to director David Gordon Green, the chameleon of the Malickian “George Washington” but also multiple weed comedies, like “Pineapple Express.” Green is mostly having a blast, not just reveling in bad behavior but going along for the ride. Our antiheroes squee with every poll point bump, and are soon reduced to rampaging teenagers, drunkenly vandalizing their opponents’ swanky hotel digs and even mooning them after a big score. Bullock brings the same spunky, clownish verve she’s long brought to fizzy rom-coms to a film in which our heroes spin Machiavellian lies to an entire country.

Thanks to Bullock, we’re made to laugh when they laugh, cheer when they cheer and generally get caught up in the mayhem. We might even forget that what they’re doing is terrible, and only too late realize that what we’ve been enjoying is the ensuring of a tyrant’s reign.

The last act puts too fine a point on this. Imagine if Michael Ritchie’s “The Candidate” went on long after its iconic punchline, trailing Robert Redford’s vacuous pol as learns the true meaning of honoring the people. It still can’t ruin what has been a goofy lark, which is better than another heavy-handed message-mongerer anyway.

“Burnt”
Director: John Wells
Stars: Bradley Cooper, Sienna Miller
Rating: R

THE WEINSTEIN COMPANY

“Burnt” is simple, obvious, even lazy ... but it has food. The camera pushes in close on fish frying in pans, on seasoning being daintily sprinkled over choice cuts, on the clatter-clatter-clatter of wooden spoons banging around inside a pot over dancing flames. If you’re a gourmand — which is to say you like staring at edibles you can’t eat on screens as much as you like actually consuming them — then the food-porn genre is one whose wares always get at least a pass.

Good thing, too, because “Burnt” is familiar in more ways than one. Bradley Cooper plays Adam Jones, once a superstar chef destroyed by ego and drugs, now seeking one of those nice movie redemptions. He’s a lot like Anthony Bourdain. In fact he’s so like Bourdain the actor has already been him (or, rather, “Jack Bourdain”), on the short-lived TV show “Kitchen Confidential.” Adam isn’t Bourdain-fun, though. As he rebuilds in London, installing himself in a new kitchen and seeking that always elusive third Michelin star, he all-caps shouts and throws pans and sweats spinal fluid when handsome dishes aren’t next-level. He upbraids no-nonsense sous-chef Helene (Sienna Miller) by saying, “You lack arrogance” and betrays his towering artistry by saying things like “Consistency is death.”

It’s not even worth pointing out that “Burnt” is consistently predictable — basically comfort food, only with a soupcon of grit. Director John Wells (“August: Osage County”) shoots in handheld, and talented writer Steven Knight (“Eastern Promises,” “Locke”) doesn’t ease up on the antisocial tirades. But Adam is mostly charming-unpleasant, and he’s guaranteed a happy ending. “Burnt” seems to think it’s a radical new twist on risotto. In truth it’s closer to a lightly spiced-up mac-and-cheese. MP

Elvis was in the building at last year's Rock 'N Roll Murdershow. CAITLIN MCCANN

The Halloween party is a difficult party to host. Too wild and you wake up with a zombie in your bathtub. Too low-key and you're sitting on your couch between The Good Witch and an unnervingly realistic Voldemort, counting the minutes until you can ditch the pirate gear and eat your Reese's in peace.

That's why we recommend leaving All Hallows Eve to TJ Kong and the Atomic Bomb. Now in its sixth year, the local rockers' Halloween Costume Ball Rock 'N Roll Murdershow hits Underground Arts Saturday night with a lineup that includes Satellite Hearts, Pine Barons, Mercury Radio Theater, Ali Wadsworth and Red 40 and the Last Groovement.

We caught up with TJ Kong (a stage name, and a pretty great one at that) for what to expect.

How did you become Halloween party hosts?
We were hand chosen by the people who invented Halloween: the Amish. And we said to each other, "What better way to have a huge party with all the different bands that inspire us and frighten us and turn us on every year?" It's become a really amazing outlet to be able to play with all these bands, any band we want, no matter what genre. Since it's Halloween and since it's our party we can invite anyone to play. There's been over 30 different bands.

Can you tell us anything about your costumes? We hear the pope might make an appearance.
Yes, the pope might make an appearance. But this isn't your mama's pope. And it's no pope you'd ever see on TV, at least not during daylight hours. This pope is gonna be the biggest, sweatiest, disco party boat pope you ever saw. Word is they call him the "Ayatollah of Rock 'N Rolla."

What are some of the best costumes you've seen over the years?
I will say that, definitively, the costumes get better every year. Last year Ali Wadsworth came late to the party in the greatest Howard Stern Fartman costume ever. The band Purples came as "Sesame Street" characters a few years back. That was hilarious. One of my favorites ever was a religious friar who actually shaved the top of his head and looked straight out of another time. This year I'm especially excited to see what Red 40 dreams up. She outdoes herself.

What to see this weekend at the Philly Film Festival

• • • • •

Michael Moore's latest is, as always, oversimplified and sometimes flat-out wrong. But it's also his lightest and most hopeful, closer to his "TV Nation" days, when he'd poke at specific plaints rather than try to take down biggies like gun control or a sitting president. Here, he settles for globe-trotting, picking out social services done better in other nations (mostly in Europe): generous vacation time in Italy; extravagant school lunches in France; Norwegian prisons that actually (maybe) reform inmates. You can pick any of these apart (and some already have), but Moore is open about aiming for a utopia where government aids in citizens' happiness. (MP)

"THE BENEFACTOR"

• • • • •

Set and shot in Philadelphia — the city sparkles — "The Benefactor" is a painfully obvious redemption tale about Franny Watts (Richard Gere), a philanthropist with more money than sense. His pet project is Olivia (Dakota Fanning), the pregnant daughter of his late best friends, and her husband Luke (Theo James). In a juicy role, Gere is charming and cringe-inducing, and his mercurial performance is compelling even when "The Benefactor" is at its most ludicrous and melodramatic. (GMK)

"FUNNY BUNNY"

"Funny Bunny"

A locally shot, low-budget character study, director Alison Bagnall's dramatic (not comic) "Funny Bunny" charts the unlikely friendship between Gene (Kentucker Audley), a lonely, divorced man, and Titty (Olly Alexander), a wealthy, lonely teen who has an obsession with breasts. The pair head off to meet Ginger (Joslyn Jenson), whom Titty knows from online. She initially rejects them, but then involves them in animal activism, whereby all three characters discover their true selves. The performances are strong but "Funny Bunny" unfolds too slowly. The film will either move viewers or simply irritate them. (GMK)

"HOT SUGAR'S COLD WORLD"

"Hot Sugar's Cold World"

Hot Sugar (Nick Koenig) records sounds: sidewalks being shoveled, an expensive piano being played, the silence of a room containing a corpse. This intriguing documentary chronicles his efforts to make music from these sounds and make sense of the world. It is fascinating to see Hot Sugar build a song from the sounds he captures, and there are other captivating moments, from an encounter with an intense fireworks salesman to an interview with Neil deGrasse Tyson. But "Hot Sugar's Cold World" is tonally uneven; it may be best enjoyed by viewers who let the sounds and images wash over them. (GMK)

"KRISHA"

"Krisha"

A true original that transcends being very personal, Trey Edwards Shults' feature debut stars his aunt, Krisha Fairchild, as an aging free spirit (named Krisha) who shows up at a family reunion filled with other real-life family members. Shults likes to bang out his shots in mobile long takes that isolate Krisha in group settings, making visceral her inability to connect, even when going head-to-head with people. The tone, vaguely comedic, always on-edge, helps temper what may boil down to group therapy, even when Krisha loses control over the urges that got her into trouble in the first place. (Fairchild, by the way, is not playing herself but a composite of other family members.) If only more TMI family airings had this one's formal chops. (MP)

"Viaje"

Writer/director Paz Fabrega's fabulous, minimalist romance, "Viaje" follows Luciana (Kattia Gonzalez) and Pedro (Fernando Bolanos) as they meet at a costume party. The couple kisses, chats playfully and spends the night together. The next morning, however, Pedro must head out to Rincon de la Viaje National Park for fieldwork. Luciana impulsively agrees to join him for camping (in the rain), tree climbing, skinny-dipping and sex. The attractive performers have undeniable chemistry as they navigate their sudden relationship. This sweet Costa Rican film, shot in luminous black and white, is as charming, sexy and funny as its two leads. (GMK)

"Suffragette" is too basic, too muddled as storytelling and even too cowardly in its choice of protagonist. But it's also tough. Once hero Maud Watts (Carey Mulligan) has gone from anonymous Cockney laundrette washer in 1912 London to militant activist protesting laws that discriminate against women, she's full-on.

That Maud had to be swept into this world at all points to a common annoyance in movies about activism. Movies, especially those aiming for mainstream acceptance, too often take the tip-toe method, introducing tabula rasas like Maud to ease us into a world that might make some uncomfortable. It's what "Stonewall" did. It's not what "Selma" did. That meant skipping the hand-holding and getting right down to business. And it meant that a movement wasn't Otherized. But that's just another flaw in a film that often feels like it's just checking off boxes rather than building organically. MATT PRIGE

"Truth"

With a title like "Truth" and with Robert Redford playing Dan Rather and with the focus being his "60 Minutes" disgrace, you probably know what to expect. It will be a mere exoneration, rewriting history so that his segment on George W. Bush — which led to him being "asked" to step down from his longtime "CBS Evening News" post — is seen as a simple witch hunt.

As it happens, the title is more like a question. "Truth" is more useful as a look at the difficulty, even the impossibility, of sifting truth out of an avalanche of facts and random chunks of simple human fallibility. The best parts of "Truth" obsess over journalistic duties: poring over avalanches of papers, struggling to lock down slippery intel. It can't always decide if it's this useful movie, or a sappier film trying to make Rather and his partner in crime, producer Mary Mapes (Cate Blanchett), look better. But when Blanchett is coming undone, it becomes incredibly, touchingly human. MP

It can take a while to get your bearings in "Room," a film whose grim story is told with grace, even pep. But eventually we piece together that the reason a young mother (Brie Larson) and 5-year-old son (Jacob Tremblay) never seem to leave a tiny living space is because they are in fact captives. There's abuse, but this isn't the kind of film that shoves it in our face. It's closer in spirit to the boy, who's been raised to ignore the horrors and has turned out to be a fun, bouncy, sort-of normal kid.

The first half is so thrilling that the second — which charts their life after their semi-improbable escape — can't help but feel like a necessary evil. The film is patient and sensitive as it follows their road to peace, which, of course, will never fully come. It makes sense that their journey would be directionless. It makes sense that the ending would feel like a random place to stop, since otherwise this could conceivably go on forever. It's honest and tasteful and real. And yet. MP

"Steve Jobs" has been hyped for only covering three events in the Apple icon's career. "Experimenter" tackles just about everything done by the (in)famous social psychologist Stanley Milgram, but it's even more experimental, even more playful and even more lousy with ideas. Played by Peter Sarsgaard with a coldness that oozes both venality and charisma, Milgram first made a splash with a test in which he asked average people to take part in a learning experiment that was secretly a test of their obedience to follow orders, no matter how inhumane. Later experiments would expand on this theme, making him both a name and a pinata for those who found his methods, which involved lying to his human guinea pigs, unethical.

Director Michael Almereyda doesn't judge. In fact, he designs the film as though Milgram were making it himself. The world of the film is artificial, complete with obvious rear-projection as characters drive. But Milgram remains a tantalizing enigma. (Sarsgaard hasn't been this razor sharp since "Shattered Glass.") It may seem as cold as Milgram, but it delights in surprising the viewer, right up to its odd, mysterious and perfectly judged final moment. MP

Aries You will meet someone who can turn your life around. Sign up for social events to maximize your chances to meet a compatible partner.

Taurus Don't get caught slacking on the job. Your reputation will suffer if you don't put your best effort forward today. Stay away from negative colleagues.

Gemini Your outgoing nature will encourage mixing business with pleasure. Hosting a gathering can be successful if you don't overspend or overindulge.

Cancer You have personal flair and a vivid imagination. A new acquaintance will provide the key to an interesting moneymaking venture.

Leo Don't expect family members to agree with your plans. Get involved in an activity and keep your relatives at arm's length in order to avoid squabbles.

Virgo Personal problems are best dealt with swiftly. Rid yourself of the people or situations that are causing you pain. Don't postpone the inevitable.

Libra A poor financial decision is likely if you act in haste. Refer to professionals regarding investments, inheritances or savings plans.

Scorpio Gambling and lending must be avoided. Financial gains look positive, but independent ventures will be much more rewarding than joint investments.

Sagittarius Volunteering for your community or another worthy cause will be fulfilling and lead to strong connections with like-minded people.

Capricorn Don't let stressful situations get to you or your health will suffer. Your creative abilities and strong intuition will allow you to succeed.

Aquarius Your charm and charisma are strong. You will be able to convert others to your way of thinking. Enjoy basking in the limelight.

Pisces Resist the urge to tell others how to solve their personal problems. Be sympathetic, but withdraw if you are asked to take sides. EUGENIA LAST

Temple-Notre Dame will be biggest

The No. 21 Owls will host the No. 9 Irish in prime time, on ABC Saturday at 8.

JON MARKS
@MetroPhilly
sports@metro.us

If you go back, back back to the 1940s you'll find Penn was a national powerhouse and regularly played other big time schools. And there were some memorable Army-Navy clashes through the years as well.

But nothing like this.

Nothing generating the kind of buzz, the kind of national fascination, the kind of alumni chest swelling that's going on here this week — especially on North Broad Street.

That's what Temple-Notre Dame Halloween night at the Linc has become: the biggest game in Philadelphia college football history.

Off to the school's best ever start, Matt Rhule's 21st-ranked Owls are 7-0. They'll take on the 6-1 Fighting Irish, ranked 9th and coming off a bye and averaging 38 points a game.

But a team that was 2-10 just two years ago and 6-6 last season can't wait.

"You can definitely feel the excitement around campus," said linebacker Tyler Matakevich, mindful ESPN will be sending its "College GameDay" crew to Independence Mall Saturday morning, leading up to the Owls' first-ever prime-time exposure on ABC. "You can't let that get in the way of what you got to do. We got a job to do and we're going to come out here and take care of business."

If they don't, Rhule says it won't be because the occasion became too big for them.

Temple's football team is on the map and a power in the AAC. Will they be able to grab another impressive non-conference win over the Irish Saturday? GETTY IMAGES college football game ever in Philly

"We embrace the moment," said Rhule, who made his 2013 coaching debut versus the Irish in South Bend, Indiana, in a 28-6 loss. "We don't pretend it's not here. We don't pretend "GameDay" is not coming. We don't pretend that we're not playing Notre Dame. All those things are great, but they don't help us play better. I'm not concerned at all that we won't be ready to play the game or that moment will be too big. Are we good enough to hang with Notre Dame? That's the concern.

"If it's good enough or not, we'll see, but I'm confident that our kids will be ready to play,"

The Owls are more than a 10-point underdog, which may say more about Brian Kelly's team than anything. Irish victims this season include Texas, Georgia Tech and USC, along with UMass, whom they crushed, 62-27, while Temple needed last-minute heroics to pull out a 25-23 win against those same Minutemen. Their loss came at the hands of No. 12 Clemson.

So don't expect Notre Dame, which has overcome the loss of quarterback Malik Zaire to thrive behind DeShone Kizer, to be distracted by all the pomp and circumstance. They're used to it. The Owls, on the other hand, are not, though they insist it won't be a factor.

WITH THEIR SEVENTH WIN LAST WEEK AGAINST EAST CAROLINA, TEMPLE BECAME BOWL ELIGIBLE FOR THE FIFTH TIME IN THE LAST SEVEN SEASONS.

"They're one of the best defenses in the nation," said Temple quarterback P.J. Walker, who's thrown for 1,314 yards and nine touchdowns, while Jahad Thomas has kept teams honest by racking up 822 yards and 12 scores. "They have big guys with a lot of speed and everything. But, I feel like if we go out and play our best football, we'll be alright. We're trying to go out there and show everybody what we can do."

Temple quarterback P.J. Walker

All season — from the time Temple stunned Penn State 27-10 in its opener to set the tone for what's followed — the Owls' mantra has been "What's next?" They're always choosing to look ahead rather than dwell on what's already happened.

Win or lose, that won't change after Saturday night.

"We just have to stay together, stick to our plan to win, stick to the process and everything will be alright," said Matakevich, who's amassed 420 career tackles, more than any active NCAA player. "We know they're good. But like Coach Rhule says, we don't worry about our opponent. We worry about us."

It's worked so far, which has created a scenario long-suffering Temple followers could've never imagined. Tomorrow night they'll be the focal point of the college football world.

For years and years the butt of jokes, no one's laughing at Temple football now.

2015 season total bust for Union

The rebuilding MLS franchise will have a new CEO to help pick up the pieces and turn toward 2016.

JEFF MCMENAMIN
@Jeff_McMenamin
sports@metro.us

The Union will need to help their goaltenders with a tougher defensive unit in 2016. GETTY IMAGES

This wasn't one of the nail-biting, down-to-the-wire Union seasons that fans have grown accustomed to the past few years. Even for the most casual Union fan, this season was a dreadful disaster. This was a season that ended with meaningless games and sparse crowds. This season was one to forget.

After a 10-17-7 record and things pointing in the wrong direction, the Union parted ways with CEO Nick Sakiewicz back on Oct. 2, a move that many believed should have been done long ago.

Back in May, the Union supporters group, the Sons of Ben, organized a protest to voice their frustrations with Sakiewicz. They staged a funeral for the franchise, parading a casket around the Union stadium which read "We Deserve Better" along the side. On the inside of the casket was an image of Sakiewicz with the words "Serial Franchise Killer" etched underneath.

The Union replaced Sakiewicz with Earnie Stewart on Monday. Union owner Jay Sugarman has full trust that Stewart is someone who can come in and turn things around immediately.

"In searching for a sporting director, we defined specific criteria we were looking for a candidate to fulfill," Sugarman said. "Earnie rated highly on all our key metrics. … Earnie's long-term vision and desire to positively impact soccer in the United States aligns closely with our vision for the Philadelphia Union and we are excited to welcome him back to the USA and put him in a position to drive the Union to long-term success."

Stewart will have a lot of work ahead of him.

The Union ended the season with a minus-13 goal differential. They scored just 42 goals on the year, which ranked last in the Eastern Conference. There were a few bright spots, especially the play of C.J. Sapong, Cristian Maidana and Zach Pfeffer, but largely there just wasn't enough talent on both sides of the ball to equate to wins.

Defensively, the Union let in 55 goals, fifth-worst in the league. The defensive futility can be attributed more to a subpar back line, rather than the goaltending of both Andre Blake and John McCarthy. The Union desperately need to shore up their back line either through a free agent acquisition or through the MLS SuperDraft this offseason.

Life needs to be injected into the fanbase once again. As an organization, they haven't reached the playoffs since 2011 and were arguably their furthest away from reaching that goal this season. Two straight agonizing Open Cup final defeats at PPL Park were no consolation for this fact.

Fans will continue to want more. Winning cures all ills, but this virus doesn't look to be going away anytime soon.

World Series

Noah Syndergaard gets the nod in Game 3 for the Mets. GETTY IMAGES

For Mets, it's Noah or never Down 0-2 to the Royals after two crushing losses at Kauffman Stadium, the Mets desperately need to pick up a win as the World Series moves to Citi Field.

Kansas City had the answers for Matt Harvey and Jacob deGrom, so now the Mets turn to rookie Noah Syndergaard to get on the board in the Fall Classic. Syndergaard turned in a decent start against the Dodgers in Game 2 of the NLDS (6.1 innings, three runs, five hits, four walks), then pitched a scoreless inning of relief in Game 5. "Thor" picked up the win in Game 2 of the NLCS against the Cubs, his last appearance, surrendering only one run on three hits and a walk in 5.2 innings.

David Wright told reporters this week that he believes Syndergaard will turn in another good start.

"[Syndergaard's] throwing the ball as well as anybody in the playoffs," he said, "I think when you have that type of stuff and the command he has shown, especially in the playoffs, you should have a lot of confidence."

The Mets will face Royals fireballer Yordano Ventura on Friday night. Ventura, who at one point during the summer was briefly demoted, has made four starts in the postseason so far and has yet to complete six innings in a start. He has a 5.09 ERA in those four starts, so the Mets would hope that they have a little more luck against him than they did with Johnny Cueto in Game 2.

NFL Picks

Aaron Rodgers' Packers are one of five undefeated NFL teams. GETTY IMAGES

Go with the Packers this weekend in battle of unbeatens

Here's Metro's look at the best bets for NFL Week 8:

Green Bay Packers (-3) at Denver Broncos
Both of these teams come into this game off their bye week undefeated at 6-0, but someone's "O" has got to go on Sunday night. The narrative for the Broncos this season has been that Peyton Manning is done and that his defense is doing all the heavy-lifting, and the stats don't belie that. Denver's defense has given up the fewest YPG in the league and has forced nine INTs and 11 fumbles, all near the league lead. But Green Bay has been almost as good on defense. The Packers bend but are hardly ever broken; Green Bay is 10th in YPG allowed but has surrendered an NFL-low 16.8 PPG. They've also forced 15 total turnovers this season, so Denver's strength is matched. The pick: Packers -3

Minnesota Vikings (-1) at Chicago Bears
The Bears come into this home game fresh off a bye week and a little healthier. Alshon Jeffery and Eddie Royal, two of Jay Cutler's most important targets, should be at full strength after playing at Detroit at less than 100 percent two weeks ago. The location of this game (Soldier Field) is important, as the home team has won the last six meetings between these two teams. The Bears compare favorably with the Vikings on both sides of the football; Minnesota ranks seventh in defense while Chicago ranks 10th, and the Bears outrank the Vikings on offense 27th to 30th in YPG despite playing without Cutler and Jeffery for parts of this season. The pick: Bears +1

Arizona Cardinals (-4.5) at Cleveland Browns
The Cardinals have the Browns overmatched on both sides of the ball. If Arizona's fourth ranked defense doesn't shut down Cleveland's moribund offense that managed just six points against the Rams last week, Carson Palmer and his fourth ranked offense will overpower Cleveland's miserable defense (ranked 28th in YPG allowed). The Cardinals could wind up covering the over (46) by themselves if their defense gets into the act; they've been among the best in the league at creating turnovers (12 INTs and 8 forced fumbles in seven games).
The pick: Cardinals -4.5

ROBERT CRISCOLA

The best of the rest

Our picks in the rest of this week's games (picks are in bold):

- Detroit Lions vs. Kansas City Chiefs (-5) in London
- Tampa Bay Buccaneers at Atlanta Falcons (-7)
- San Diego Chargers at Baltimore Ravens (-3)
- Tennessee Titans at Houston Texans (-4.5)
- New York Giants at New Orleans Saints (-3)
- Cincinnati Bengals at Pittsburgh Steelers (-1)
- San Francisco 49ers at St. Louis Rams (-8)
- New York Jets (-2.5) at Oakland Raiders
- Seattle Seahawks at Dallas Cowboys (-6)
- Indianapolis Colts at Carolina Panthers (-6.5)

Getting in the end zone key in daily fantasy

Whether you have dreams of winning a million dollars or beating your friends in a tournament, the best way to get paid is finding those players with the best chance of finding pay dirt the goal is to target a player who is frequently used in the red zone against a defense that has been burned by a particular position. Knowing these trends should help you pick out those players with the best chances of scoring.

Running backs

TODD GURLEY ($8,100)
At this point, how can you not start Gurley? He has eight red-zone rushing attempts this year, including three in Week 7, with two ending up as touchdowns. He has also had at least 19 carries for 128 yards in three straight games. He has a great chance of staying hot this week against a Niners defense that has allowed 113 rushing yards per game and seven rushing touchdowns to opposing RBs.
DOUG MARTIN ($7,500), JUSTIN FORSETT ($6,900), CHARCANDRICK WEST ($6,600), JONATHAN STEWART ($6,600)

Wide receivers

JULIO JONES ($9,200)
Julio has not broken 100 yards in four straight games, but he did score against the Titans, snapping his streak of three games without finding the end zone. His 12 red zone targets are by far the most on the Falcons, and he's seen double-digit targets in all but one game.
CALVIN JOHNSON ($8,600), KEENAN ALLEN ($8,000), STEFON DIGGS ($6,700), DORIAL GREEN-BECKHAM ($4,900)

Tight ends

TYLER EIFERT ($6,000)
Eifert's nine red zone targets are tied with A.J. Green for the team lead, although six of his have culminated in touchdowns. He has a great matchup this week against the Steelers, who have been burned by tight ends, allowing 44 receptions, 465 yards and six touchdowns.
TRAVIS KELCE ($5,900), BENJAMIN WATSON ($5,400), AUSTIN SEFERIAN-JENKINS ($5,200)
